

THE MURDOCH MEDIA SERVICE OBLIGES GOP LIES

Gosh, what a remarkable coinkydink. This morning, Roll Call comes out with this story:

Specifically, Republicans are planning to use the kidnapping and subsequent murder of three U.S. soldiers in Iraq earlier this year to put a "human face" on the issue, the House staffer explained. According to this aide, while Democrats' arguments about privacy may resonate with some voters, Republicans believe using real-world examples of how a weak FISA has put U.S. troops in danger will help galvanize public support for their position.

"We're content to have the Democrats make these abstract and obtuse privacy arguments," the aide said. "As long as we make this debate ... about real world, human examples," Republicans believe they can maintain party discipline on Bush's veto and effectively fight Democrats in the public arena.

And on the very same day, Murdoch's rag comes out with this story.
