

PALIN FAMILY VALUES: NO RELATIONSHIP OF TRUST WITH HER FAMILY?!?!?

Yeah, I know. Someone on McCain's team called Sarah Palin a diva. But I'm much more intrigued that that McCain adviser said Sarah "does not have any relationships of trust with ... her family."

A second McCain source says she appears to be looking out for herself more than the McCain campaign.

"She is a diva. She takes no advice from anyone," said this McCain adviser. "She does not have any relationships of trust with any of us, her family or anyone else.

"Also, she is playing for her own future and sees herself as the next leader of the party. Remember: Divas trust only unto themselves, as they see themselves as the beginning and end of all wisdom."

Is this person honestly suggesting that Palin doesn't have a relationship of trust with Todd Wormtongue? That he stalked Mike Wooten for two years—purportedly out of concern for her safety and the safety of her sister—but she doesn't trust him? That she allows him to sit in on all of her cabinet meetings, not to mention her debate prep sessions? That she's lugged her family around to so many campaign meetings it has made McCain's people squirmy? That Todd submitted a potentially false deposition to Stephen Branchflower to downplay the degree to which he, Todd Palin, was orchestrating the pressure on Walt Monegan? That Todd and she gave the personnel board investigator a sworn deposition yesterday, together? But she doesn't trust him?!?!?!?!?

Man. Circular firing squad is fun and all, but that's just creepy.