

IS ALL THIS ABOUT C STREET?

I'm curious. Is all the language Mark Sanford uses about God wanting him to remain Governor about C Street?

He's using the language of the Chosen and—in a state that can match him for fundie cred (or, for those who haven't admitted adultery, exceed him)—he's saying his God knows better than others' God.

Embattled South Carolina Gov. Mark Sanford acknowledged Tuesday that he has been shaken by the failure of a single fellow Republican to back him in his fight to save his job, but vowed to fight on for conservative causes and for "what God wanted me to do with my life."

[snip]

He said he intends to complete his term, not to hold on to power but to fight for conservative principles of governance.

"I feel absolutely committed to the cause, to what God wanted me to do with my life," he said in an interview. "I have got this blessing of being engaged in a fight for liberty, which is constantly being threatened."

Plus, the conflation of "liberty" with "God" seems like solid C Street propaganda.

I'm wondering whether Sanford is refusing to step down because the powers he must answer to—as distinct from SC's Republican party—have told him to stand his ground.
