Thought I'd share some pics from the rally today in Lansing. It's a decent sized crowd—6,000 around noon; they expect to get a whole bunch of teachers out for the last set of speakers at 4:30.

Here's the crowd just outside of the Capitol in Lansing. Lots of signs about the Constitution protesting the Emergency Financial Manager law.

Look who showed up to Lansing to control Rick Snyder?

The mitten they're afraid of.

Obviously, this one isn't from the rally. I took it while I was walking McCaffrey the MilleniaLab this morning. But I thought I'd share it because it seemed like such a hopeful omen and because it gives you a sense of what a magical spring day it is today. You could literally hear the sap dripping into the buckets.
