THE FOURTH ACCOUNT: THE GRAND JURY INVESTIGATION INTO JEFFREY CLARK AND OTHERS

Two recently unsealed grand jury opinions provide a glimpse into how the government is managing the tricky privilege problems created when most suspected co-conspirators in a plot are lawyers.

THE THINNESS OF THE JANUARY 6 COMMITTEE'S OBSTRUCTION

REFERRAL

On the key issue of its obstruction referral, the January 6 Committee missed the opportunity to show how, by any standard under consideration, Trump corruptly tried to prevent Congress to certify the electoral victory of Trump's opponent. He did so by committing other crimes. He did so by mobilizing a violent mob. He did so using fraudulent documents. And most importantly, he did so for personal benefit.

WITNESSING THE PROUD BOYS

The Proud Boys have raised at least five witnesses who they would like to call in their defense but who would invoke the Fifth.

THE RULES AGAINST KEEPING CLASSIFIED DOCUMENTS IN AN UNSECURE RV PARKED ALONGSIDE JEREMY BROWN'S HOME

Jeremy Brown wants to argue he had a good reason to bring classified information and store it in his RV. Probably, that argument will work no better for him than it has any number of Espionage Act defendants – or for that other disgruntled Floridian who took classified information home from work.

ANOTHER LATE SEPTEMBER RUSSIAN INFLUENCE PEDDLER INDICTMENT

DOJ announced the September indictment of Andrii Derkach, the Ukrainian they label as a Russian spy who peddled all the Hunter Biden dirt to Rudy in December 2019.

TWO INCONSISTENT STORIES ON ADDITIONAL SEARCHES OF TRUMP'S PROPERTY

A Trump-friendly WaPo story reveals that an outside firm conducted additional searches for stolen classified documents on at least Bedminster and Trump Tower, and claims that some kind of attestation that no more documents were found (though that may apply only to Bedminster). CNN, however, reveals four properties were searched and states that no attestation was made.
