

CREDICO FEARED STONE WOULD GO TO PRISON; CORSI'S LAWYER FEARS HE WOULD NOT

As you heard, last night Donald Trump commuted the sentence of his rat-fucker.

There's a lot to say about whether Trump will succeed in his effort to thwart the investigation into himself. I guess I know how I'll be spending the remaining 12 days of my quarantine: considering just that question.

I'd like to start by pointing to a curious dynamic: Randy Credico, who played a key public role in Stone's trial and who destroyed the cover story Stone had started crafting as early as 2016, feared that Stone would go to prison and Stone's thuggish racist buddies would harass him or worse in retaliation.

Minutes before the actual commutation, by contrast, the "lawyer" for Jerome Corsi, Larry Klayman, wrote a post arguing that Trump shouldn't pardon Stone, in part because Stone is so guilty...

Roger Stone, contrary to the spin that is peddled by his surrogates at Fox News and elsewhere, was justly convicted of seven felony counts of perjury, witness tampering and obstruction of justice. I know because I sat in the courtroom listening and observing during his two-week trial, while the pundits seeking to gain political favor with the president by supporting his supposed friend Stone did not. Regardless of whether the judge, Amy Berman Jackson, or the jury foreperson, was biased against Stone, the hard fact of life is that Stone's lawyers, who could have themselves been indicted for providing false information to Congress on their client's behalf, did not present one witness, repeat, one witness, including Stone himself, in defense of the prosecutors' case in chief.

Though Stone sat at counsel's table frequently smirking and smiling during the trial, the bottom line is that regardless of any bias, the now-convicted felon had no defense. This in a nutshell is why he does not want a new trial, even in another forum outside of Washington, D.C., because he was convicted by his own words and deeds.

... And in part because Stone came after Credico and Klayman.

While you have done many good things in office, you need independent voters in Florida, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Ohio and other so-called swing states to win reelection, so don't blow it with a pardon for Roger Stone. He is not worth it! Believe me, I know. And, if you want to see why, just pick up a copy of my autobiography, "Whores: Why and How I Came to Fight the Establishment!" which chronicles my personal experience with this self-styled Mafia admirer and dirty trickster.

Or go on the Pacer court internet system and find the defamation complaints in Florida and elsewhere that I have been forced to file against him for my brave client Dr. Corsi and me, whom Stone smeared with disgusting slander and libel because he feared that Corsi would testify against him in his criminal trial – something Jerry never wanted to do.

Admittedly, Klayman is selling a book. Maybe that's all there is to this.

But, as I laid out here, the real dispute between Corsi and Stone has to do with whether Corsi told the truth when he told Mueller's prosecutors and the grand jury that an August 31, 2016 report he wrote on John Podesta was done to provide Stone a cover story for his "time in a barrel" tweet about Podesta.

Corsi himself told a lot of lies to prosecutors. But he's willing to confront Stone – and Trump – to insist that that testimony was true.

Randy Credico, who has no fucking clue what Roger Stone did, but who played a significant part in getting him convicted, feared that Roger Stone would go to prison. But Corsi's team, who has a much better sense what Stone did yet played little part in getting Stone convicted, feared Stone would not go to prison.
