

NO WONDER THE SIEGELMAN PROSECUTOR DIDN'T WANT AN INVESTIGATION OF THE JUROR EMAILS

One of the key grounds for appeal in the Don Siegelman case is that there was evidence of juror misconduct—two jurors plotting how to get a conviction—that the prosecution had the US postal inspectors investigate even while insisting any investigation would taint the jury process.

At issue is a series of e-mails that arose in 2006 suggesting that two jurors had outside influence as they decided Siegelman's bribery conviction.
