

ARREST JOHN BOEHNER

The government's primary strategy, in responding to the ACLU's request for release of the FISC rulings disallowing parts of the Administration's domestic wiretapping program, is to argue that the ACLU doesn't have standing to ask for the documents. Only an aggrieved person can ask for such rulings, and even then, the aggrieved person cannot see the orders themselves that authorize domestic spying.

But there are two problems with that, it seems.
