

OPEN THREAD: ANGST

We're suffering from a collective existential dread. Offload some of it here in this open thread.

OPEN THREAD: THE SCREAM

If you can't think of something that made you want to scream this week, count yourself a lucky person. This is an open thread – scream away.

OF SPIES AND CASINOS

A look back at the case of Russian spies arrested in the U.S. – the ones looking into market destabilization, recruiting from college students, and investing in casinos.

LONG ISLAND ICED TEA

What an interesting coincidence that a Russian spy vessel didn't 'loiter' near any of more than a dozen naval sites along the east coast. Instead, it picked a spot near Long Island. Iced tea, anyone?

NEVERTHELESS, SHE PERSISTED

In a breathtakingly offensive move, Senate Leader Mitch McConnell used a gag rule to stop Elizabeth Warren from reading Coretta Scott King's letter about Jeff Sessions' efforts to suppress African American voters.

WEDNESDAY: TICK-TOCK STOCK

In this post: A short film depicts a failed love story in electronic debris and a tick-tock behind yesterday's stock market's scramble.

SHOW US WHERE THE BAD MEN TOUCHED YOU, JASON

What happened in that room when they were alone, out of the public's eye? How and where were GOP Congresspersons touched?

FLASHBACK: THE ROAD AHEAD

Last of a four-part series. In this piece I'd laid out what needed to be done in a local organization which wasn't organized back then.

It may still serve as a map for the road ahead.

FLASHBACK: ROUGHER ROADS

Part Three of this four-part series looking back at popping my activist cherry. So not a virgin any more, and a damned good thing given how much rougher the road ahead.

FLASHBACK: A PERSONAL JOURNEY

Part Two of a four-part series – what a journey it was from 2003, and what a trip since then on the road of political discovery.