

THE OATH KEEPERS DILEMMA: THE GOVERNMENT HAS THREATENED YET ANOTHER INDICTMENT

All the Oath Keepers want more time to contemplate the evidence against them. One of them, Joshua James, even suggests that given the threat of another indictment, none of them may go to trial.

With three public plea deals, the government has got the remaining 15 defendants playing an awful game of prisoner's dilemma, trying to calculate how to get out of this mess.